

At the Hospital

Janet is admitted to hospital because of a bad asthma attack. She is in the children's ward. There are colourful curtains with flowers and trees. The walls are bright yellow with many stickers on them. There are three other beds in the ward. The other children are about the same age as Janet. They talk to her and play games with her.

A nurse comes in with a tray of medicine in the afternoon. She gives each of the children a biscuit and a sweet for taking their medicine.

Janet stays for three days before the doctor allows her to go home. When Janet is discharged from hospital, she takes down the telephone numbers of her new friends. They promise to keep in touch.
