Helping a Visually-impaired Old Man

Kenny was at the junction waiting for the lights to change. He wanted to cross the road. There was a visually-impaired old man next to him.

Soon, the lights changed. Kenny looked at the old man. He was still standing there. He felt sorry for the old man. He tapped the man on his shoulder and told him that he could cross the road. He took his arm and led him across the road. Kenny made sure that none of the other pedestrians bumped into the old man. A cyclist came very close to the old man but Kenny was quick enough to pull him aside. Kenny helped the old man cross the road safely. The old man thanked Kenny for his help.

Kenny whistled as he went on his way. It felt good to help others.
